

Quality Certified Fabricators

In an ideal world, an owner's representative would inspect the shop of every fabricator bidding on a project. Obviously, in the real world, such a time-consuming task isn't practical. But there is an alternative! The AISC Quality Certification Program can act as a pre-qualification system for structural steel fabricators.

What's Certification?

The purpose of the AISC Quality Certification Program is to confirm to the construction industry that a certified structural steel fabricating plant has the personnel, organization, experience, procedures, knowledge, equipment, capability, and commitment to produce fabricated steel of the required quality for a given category of structural steel certification. Certification looks at processes and procedures, because it's easy to build quality into a project, but much more difficult to check for it after the fact.

What's New?

AISC is in the process of revising its program for structural steel fabricators. The first step was the creation of the Standard for Steel Building Structures (a similar standard for steel bridges is planned for 2006). The new standard replaces the traditional certification categories for Conventional Steel Building Structures and Complex Steel Building Structures, and all certified steel building fabricators will have been audited to the new standard by the end of 2005. During the transition period, however, specifiers can continue to specify AISC Certification as usual.

The Standard differs from the current "checklist" approach to certification in that it requires a written quality manual which includes all aspects of the fabricator's quality management system. The Standard clearly defines specifics of the fabricator's quality system to owners, the design community and the industry—and in language more familiar to specifiers and owners. Now, when an AISC Certified Fabricator is specified, it is clearer to all parties what AISC Certification means.

For More Information

Each November, Modern Steel Construction publishes a list of AISC Quality Certified fabricators as of press time. The list is updated weekly, so be sure to check the AISC web site for the latest listings at www.aisc.org/quality.

Key to Certification Categories

- Standard for Steel Building Structures (STD): The certification will replace "Conventional" and "Complex Building Certification" categories by the end of 2005. The Standard confirms to owners, the design community, the construction industry and specifying engineers that a certified structural steel fabricating facility has the personnel, organization, experience, procedures, knowledge, equipment and commitment to produce fabricated steel of the quality required for normal structural steel building construction.
- Conventional Steel Building Structures (SBD): The certification is typically specified for small public service and institutional buildings (schools, etc.), shopping centers, light manufacturing plants, miscellaneous and ornamental iron work, warehouses, low-rise beam/column/light truss structures.
- Complex Steel Building Structures (CBD): The certification is typically specified for high-rise buildings, large public service and institutional buildings, heavy manufacturing plants, powerhouses, and petrochemical processing facilities.
- Simple Steel Bridge Structures (SBR): The certification is typically specified for unspliced, rolled beam bridges.
- Major Steel Bridges (CBR): The certification is typically specified for large span bridges. Main members are typically fabricated girders that must be spliced with a welded or bolted connection.
- Metal Building Systems (MB): The certification indicates re-engineered metal building systems including cold-formed members and panels. For this separate listing, see page 58.

Note: Fabricators certified for Complex Steel Building Structures are automatically certified for Conventional Steel Building structures and those certified for Major Steel Bridges are automatically certified for Simple Steel Bridge Structures.

- Sophisticated Paint System Endorsements (P1, P2, P3): There are currently three Paint Endorsements available:
  - P1—Sophisticated Paint Endorsement-Enclosed
  - P2—Sophisticated Paint Endorsement-Covered
  - P3—Sophisticated Paint Endorsement-Exposed
- Fracture Critical Members Endorsement (F): The certification indicates familiarity with procedures required to produce fracture critical members in accordance with a fracture control plan as defined by AASHTO or AREA.

Quality Certified Metal Building Fabricators

(alphabetical)

What is Metal Building Certification?

The Metal Building certification category covers pre-engineered metal building systems including cold-formed members and panels. A metal building systems consists of a specifically designed, integrated set of components and assemblies functioning synergistically in the form of a complete building shell. This includes primary and secondary framing, roof and wall covering and accessory components that are manufactured in a manner permitting plant and/or field inspection prior to assembly or erection.
